Program Model Options

Driving and Community Mobility Service Options

Driving Rehabilitation Program Models vary widely. Most programs include the provision of services to meet the needs of some populations and develop a referral pathway for specialized services. Programs may start up with a more limited scope of services, building and expanding as indicated.

The service options listed below reflect a comprehensive scope. It is up to each program developer to make decisions about which services will be included based on what is realistic for the resources available. If a program elects to provide a partial scope, it is imperative that collaborations with other programs are sought and appropriate referrals made so that individuals receive an adequate level of service.

Assessment	Intervention	Counseling
• Screening • Clinical assessment • Behind-the-wheel assessment * • Adaptive equipment assessment • Community mobility or transit assessment • Van program	• Behind-the-wheel training • Adaptive equipment training • Travel training • Intervention focused on remediation of visual, physical, and cognitive skills • Van program	• Mobility management • Cessation counseling • Educational programming within the community and health and community practitioners

*If the program does not provide this service, it is imperative to refer the client to another service provider for this assessment. Possibilities for this referral include an occupational therapy specialist or a driving school.

Note: Adapted from Finn, J., Gross, M., Hunt, L., McCarthy, D., Pierce, S., Redepenning, S., et al. (2004). Driving Evaluation and retraining programs: A report of good practices. Bethesda, MD: AOTA Press.